Color

Principles

There are lots of common color combinations that are pleasing to the eye or eye catching:

Complementary Contrasting
Split-complementary
Triads

Pay attention to colors that you find pleasing to the eye or that feel like the brand message you are trying to create. Write them down!

Examples: Earth tones, neons, pastels, etc.

Color

Tools

In the world of design & marketing, it's important that people are able to describe colors accurately. There are color "codes" used to describe different colors.

Examples: RGB, CMKY,
Hexadecimal

Font Principles

Fonts

Principles

Fonts are one of the most subtle, but impactful choices you'll make with your graphics.

Look for inspiration & examples online. There are very deep rabbit holes if you are interested.

Remember that you want to have some consistency with your brand. Consider choosing one font or font family and sticking with it for everything you make.

Fonts

Tools

There are thousands of pages with suggested font pairings. Spend some time looking through them, and decide on a few you think represent your brand AND work together.

You'll often need 2 or 3 different fonts for a particular graphic.

Balance

Principles

Both symmetrical and asymmetrical arrangements can be attractive. Keep the focus on the goal of the graphic.

Pay attention to where your eye goes first.

A sense of balance is hard to describe, but you'll probably need to practice and make multiple drafts of the same graphic to see what looks good.

Look at graphics that you like and study them. Often.

Balance

Principles

The main tip I have for balance (and for all of these graphical principles) is to find some friends or associates who have a good eye, and ask their opinion.

Keep things simple as much as you can. More noise distracts from your message.

Everything you are doing is about representing your brand and communicating the message you want.

Polished, simple graphics can communicate an organized, polished business. Look good, feel good 😊
